Metals . . .

Building Blocks of America

Metals have been called the building blocks of America. They are vital to the defense, welfare and prosperity of our country.

The minerals industry which supplies our metals is basic. Without it no industry could flourish, for it provides the raw materials required to make the tools for all other industry.

Our society advances to give us higher and better standards of living. And with it man's dependence upon mineral raw materials steadily increases. Yet we seldom stop to recognize or appraise the source of products we use and the luxuries we enjoy. We take them for granted largely unmindful of the fact that the majority of those we can see, touch and use come from mines.

The kind of economy we live in today cannot do without the products of mines. We use them in our housing and construction, in our power and communications systems; for industrial machinery and equipment, to help supply our food and give us new sources of fresh water. The minerals industry or its products enter into every phase of human endeavor.

The Anaconda Company in Montana has been an important supplier of mineral raw materials for many years. Our goal is to keep our mineral resources—those now in use and others still to be developed—supplying the needs of America and working for Montana far into the future.

Our job in Montana is more difficult today because of the greater problems of economics, environment, transportation, engineering and technology within a pattern of higher costs and lower ore grades. The industry alone cannot overcome all the problems. There is need for broader public understanding of the importance of mining and for fair and realistic policies for the industry. Such support is needed to prolong present mining operations in our state and to bring forth new reserves in a time when economically useful deposits are more difficult to find and more costly to develop.

The Environment

People everywhere are concerned about cleaning up the environment, reducing the pollution of air and water and lessening the impact of man's activities on his surroundings.

The task is monumental.

We at Anaconda are facing up to our share—making major improvements, doing research, seeking the plans, technology and money to conquer waste and pollution problems.

Anaconda was one of the first to create an Environmental Engineering Department. Established in 1965, it is headquartered in Butte with a staff of 13 whose work is devoted exclusively to the company's programs for air, water and land use. It coordinates work of environmental quality staff members assigned to Anaconda's mines, plants and other facilities hemisphere-wide and is responsible for all phases of environmental control from the design and construction of control systems to monitoring emissions and doing the follow-up work to reduce pollution problems.

Anaconda's program covers new installations as well as older plants which were built in years gone by with standards then acceptable, and in many cases ahead of their times. Our policy for new plants or expansions of existing facilities is to build nothing without careful consideration of the impact on the environment. Fully adequate pollution controls are priority items in all planning. As part of a continuing program, Anaconda has budgeted, in the current year, more than $10 million for environmental improvements at our Montana installations.

Our goal is a combination of good industry and good environment.

To this end, much has been and is being done. Much more remains to be done.

What Is Anaconda?

The Anaconda Company is a Montana corporation.

It is the state's largest single industrial employer.

It is a major taxpayer, providing over $10.5 million in Montana taxes this year. In three counties, Silver Bow, Deer Lodge and Flathead, it is the largest taxpayer.

In 1970 it met a Montana payroll of over $88 million in wages, salaries and benefits. It paid $4 million in pensions to retired Montana workers. It provides a good livelihood, direcly and indirectly, for thousands of Montana families.

Anaconda spends about $200 million annually in Montana for wages, taxes, supplies, construction and services to operate its mines, mills, smelters, refineries, laboratories and other facilities. This money enters every phase of Montana life. It helps to create jobs in other industries, trades and professions, and to generate millions in additional taxes for the support of our schools and government.

In the past seven years its capital expenditures have amounted to $183 million for new plants and equipment in Montana.

It is the producer of copper, aluminum, zinc and other metals and of quality forest products.

It is a good customer of hundreds of Montana businesses, large and small.

Anaconda is proud to be a corporate citizen of Montana, and is working to do a good job in and for our state.
